It’s about the students New FCCTC Principal 2014-15

This article was published in the State Journal on August 8, 2014 by Brad Bowman.

On his second day of school as the new principal at the Franklin County Career and Technical Center, James Hardin hasn’t spent any time at his desk — and doesn’t plan to the rest of the year.

Hardin, 46, has spent the majority of his educational career in Fayette County. His last position as the Fayette County Public School District’s coordinator of career and technical education gave Hardin a great opportunity to steer the district’s direction, but he missed working with students.

“ If you ask any student in here at the Franklin County Career and Technical Center if they know who their principal is, they will know,” Hardin said. “I have spent the last two days getting to know the students and staff, gone to their classes with them and learned about who they are.”

Hardin said he is about making connections and results and doesn’t like to spend time in meetings where discussions just lead to more discussions without change.

PRE-ENGINEERING STUDENTS IN 'TRAINING'

Our first-year pre-engineering students taking "Introduction to Engineering Design" deserve applause for their year-long efforts to master the computer-aided design software, Autodesk Inventor. Almost every student reached a level of proficiency which allowed them to design practically any three-dimensional object within a matter of minutes. As a final project, students created a steam locomotive part by part, then assembled those parts into a working train moving down the track. The eagerness at which the students approached each day's assignment was thrilling to see. They also demonstrated a readiness to tutor each other in better ways to approach a problem and to create parts. Teamwork was evident every day in the engineering labs. We look forward to three more years of productive work from this group as they continue to grow and mature in the engineering discipline. There is no doubt that many of these CAD stars of today will be the creative innovators and engineers of tomorrow.
